DESCRIPTION

IHRFG-Ariadne funder learning visits aim to help members improve their understanding of and response to timely and relevant international human rights issues, while providing opportunities to meet peer grantmakers and human rights leaders from around the globe and promote local human rights philanthropy.

We are currently witnessing the highest levels of global displacement on record:

- 65.3 million forcibly displaced people
- Including 21.3 million refugees
- More than half are under the age of 18
- 10 million more people are stateless

Persecution. Discrimination. Armed conflict. Natural disaster. Poverty. These are just a few of the causes forcing people to flee their homes. What more can human rights funders do to address the root causes of forced migration? Simultaneously, what are effective strategies for ensuring the rights of refugees and internally displaced people are respected? Amidst the current global migration crisis in Europe and the Middle East, how have funders and practitioners responded so far, and how can efforts be bolstered?

This learning visit to Amman involves three days of critical exchanges with local and international activists and experts, networking with peers, and visits with local social justice organizations to explore these and other key questions.

OBJECTIVES

- Learn from and exchange with peers, experts, and activists from around the world to expand understanding of the causes and effects of forced migration, looking through the lens of Jordan as a case example.
- Study international, regional and national responses to, and explore funder strategies to address, migration situations around the world (with particular attention to the current global migration crisis originating from the Middle East, North Africa, and East Africa).
- Provide hands-on experiences that connect participants physically, emotionally, and intellectually to people and their realities; that dispel myths, misperceptions, and preconceptions; and that help inform strategic and practical responses.
- Maintain a gender lens throughout our studies and give specific attention to the situation of unaccompanied minors.
- Identify collaborative opportunities with peer grantmakers from around the world.
- Engage with local grantmakers and practitioners to build bridges and promote local philanthropy for human rights.

GUIDING QUESTIONS

- How can rights-based approaches effectively address the root causes of forced migration?
- What are the rights-based approaches to addressing the humanitarian needs of refugees and internally displaced people?
- How can human rights funders ensure that they “do no harm” in their responses to the ramifications of mass forced migration?
- How can human rights funders be effective and strategic with their partners in the face of formidable obstacles, such as terrorism and armed conflict, closing civil society space, rising xenophobia and nationalism, and religious extremism?

Topics/Considerations

- Examine current policies on migration and the implications it has for migrants and the asylum system in Jordan and other receiving countries.
- Understand the pressures and restraints on local NGOs, particularly in respect of closing space and anti-terrorism policy. Jordan was one of the first countries to adopt a restrictive law on association in 2009.
- The role and importance of host communities in receiving refugees (in addition to camps)
- Palestinians have been driven off their land since 1948. Palestinians form more than 50% of people in Jordan. What lessons are there to ensure opportunities, dignity and protection for refugees that were forced out of their land? What can we do to ensure such rights for Palestinians, Syrians and all other refugees?
- As funders, could we review or add conditions to our grantees to respect/ adhere to HR when dealing with refugees or when they work with local partners?
